Dear Mr. Fouts:

This message acknowledges receipt of your communication submitted to the U.S. Postal Service Office of Inspector General (OIG) Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) office.

FOIA is about the release of records we have in our possession and provides only for disclosing federal agency records and does not require government agencies to create records or to answer questions^[1]. FOIA does not let you appeal any investigative decisions or ask us to research aside from searching for responsive records.

The FOIA sheds light on an agency's performance of its statutory duties. The FOIA provides that any person has a right, enforceable in court, to obtain access to federal agency records, unless such records (or portions of them) are protected from public disclosure by one of nine exemptions or by one of three special law enforcement record exclusions.

The U.S. Postal Service comprises the Postal Service, the U.S. Postal Inspection Service (USPIS); the Postal Rate Commission (PRC); and the OIG; each with its own area of responsibility.

The Postal Service's mission is to provide prompt and reliable mail delivery services to individuals and businesses at fair and equitable prices to all customers. The Postal Service maintains the manuals covering domestic mail, international mail, postal operations, administrative support, employee and labor relations, financial management, and procurement. Information pertaining to the U.S. Postal Service is found on the Internet at: <https://www.usps.com>.

The USPIIS's mission is to support and protect the Postal Service and its employees, infrastructure, and customers; enforce the laws that defend the nation's mail system from illegal or dangerous use; and ensure public trust in the mail. Information on the USPIIS is available on the Internet at: <https://postalinspectors.uspis.gov>.

The OIG's mission is to help maintain confidence in the postal system and improve the Postal Service's bottom line through independent audits and investigations. The OIG prevents and detects fraud, waste, and misconduct; promotes economy, efficiency, and effectiveness; promotes program integrity; and keep the Postal Service Governors, Congress, and Postal Service management informed of problems, deficiencies, and corresponding corrective actions.

The OIG maintains a Hotline so individuals can report suspected activities of waste, fraud, or misconduct including lost or stolen mail.

You state in your request you filed your complaint the same day you filed your FOIA request with this office on March 13, 2025. Please note, we advise complainants to wait at least 60-90 days after filing a complaint before submitting a FOIA request for any responsive records to allow time for the complaint to be entered into the database, assigned to the proper group for review, and any investigative activity to occur.

In light of this information, please advise this office if you still wish to move forward with your request.

Sincerely,

USPS-OIG FOIA Team
